British statisticians are reckoning up what Great Britain owea to the scourge of Influenza. There have been two serious epidemics of Influenza there in the past ten years, one in the winter of 1891-92, when the amount of property paying death duties advanced $150,000,000 above the average, and again in the past winter, when the Increase was about $140,000,000 over the previous year. The fact that influenza was almost the sole cause of the increase is shown in elaborate statistical tables.

CHAPTER 1. THE CABMAN'S FARE.

It was bitterly cold. The keen Deeember wind swept down the crowded thoroughfare, nipping the noses and ears of the gny pedestrians, comfortably muffled in their warm wraps.

Brondway was thronged with the usual holiday shoppers and pleasureseekers. Cabs with their jaded steeds driven by weatherbeaten jehns, and private carriages behind well-groomed horses hundled by liveried coachmen, deftly made their way through the crowds and deposited their fares at the entrances of the brightly-lighted theatera or fashionable restaurants. A wizened hag, seated on the curbstone at the corner, seemed to shrink into herself with the cold as she turned the crank of her tiay barrel-organ und ground out a dismal and scarcely audible eacophony; while an anxiouseyed newsboy, not yet in his teens, shivered on the opposite side of the way, as, with tremulous lips, he solicited a purchaser for his unsold stock. One could hardly be expected to open in warm overcoat on such a cold night, for the sake of throwing a cent to un old beggar woman, or of buying a newspaper from a ragged urchin. Even the gayly decorated shop windows failed to arrest the idle passerby; for it required perpetual motion to keep the blood in circulation.

The giant policeman on the crossing. representing the majesty of the law, swayed the crowd of vehicles and pedestrians with the authoritative gestures of his ponderous hands, and gailantly escorted bands of timld women through the inextricable maze.

And withal, the cable cars, with theh discordant clangor, rumbled rapidly to and fro, like noisy shuttles, shooting the woof of the many-hued fabric which is the life of a great city.

Presently from one of the side streets there came a cab, which started lelsurely to cross Broadway. The hig policeman, with his eyes fixed upon an approaching car, held up a warning hand, to which the driver seemed to pay no attention, for the reins remained slack and the listless horse continued to move slowly across the avenue.

Several people turned to look with mild curiosity at the bold cahman who dared thus to disregard the authority of blue cloth and brass buttons. Their surprise turned quickly to amazement and dismay when their eyes rested upon him; for his head had fallen forward ved mun the box with every motion of the cab. He seemed unconscious of his surroundings, like one drunk or in a stupor. At his side sat a young man closely muffled in his overcout, and with a nealskin cap pulled well down over his ears. His face was deathly pale. Those who canglit sight of his features saw that his bloodless lips were firmly act, and that his eyes glittered with a feverish light. He carried one hand in the lapel of his coat. With the other he shook the inert form of the miconscious cabman, in an effort to arouse him to a sense of the impending danger.

The altuation flashed upon the gripman on the car. Instuntiy he threw his weight upon the brakewheel, at the same time loudly sounding his gong. The policeman, too, understood in a twinkling what was about to happen, and rushed for the horse's head. But It was too late. The cab was fairly across the track when the car, with slackened speed, crashed into it. man in the scalskin cap sprang from the box to the street. He lamled upon hla fect; but, iosing his balance, he fell forward upon his left arm, which atill remained in the lapel of his coat. He must have hurt himself; for those atanding near him heard him groan. prisc. But the center of interest was elsewhere, and no one paid much attention to the young man, who, arlsing quickly, disappeared in the crowd. The cab, after tottering for an in-atant on two wheels, fell over upon lts side, with a loud noise of splintering wood and breaking glass. The driver rolled off the box in a heap. At the same time, the panic-stricken passengers on the car rushed madly the dead man's coat, extended downfor the doors, fighting like wiil beasta in their haste to reach a place

After the first frenzied moment, it cab. became evident that, although bailly shaken up, the passengers had received no Injuries, except such bruises, in their mad atruggle to escape. lly this time a crowd had collected about | quick!" the overturned cab, and several more policemen had come to the assistance of the first one, who was now seated serenciy upon the head of the cab-horse, a precaution seemiagly superfluons, for the poor beast, though uniajured, appeared to be quite satisfied to rest where he lay until he should be forced once more to resume the grind of his unhappy existence. 'The cabman had been rudely shaken by his fail. He had lain so biank amazement for an instant. Then though unconscious for the space of a he turned away contemptuously, few seconds; then, with assistance, he had managed to struggle to his feet. He stood now as though dazed by the shock, trying to understand what had happened.

"Are you hurt?" inquired one of the policemen. The man, numbling an unintelligh-ble reply, raised his hund to a scalp wound from which the blood was tlowing freely.

At that moment two men forced their way through the crowd which a circle of policemen had some difficulty in keeping at a distance from the wounded cubman. Due was a middle-aged individual, who gave his name as Dr. Thurston and offered his services as a physician; the other was a young man with keen gray eyes, who said nothing, but exhibited a reporter's bailge.

The physician at once turned his attention to the cabman; felt him. thumped him, pinched him; smelt his breath; and then delivered his ver-

'No bones broken. The slight sealp wound doesn't amount to anything. The man has been drinking henvily. He is simply drunk." The horse had by this thue been unharnessed and the cab had been lifted upon its wheels again. The reporter stood by a silent and apparently listless spectator of the scene. Dr. Thurston turned to him: "Come along, Sturgis; neither you nor I are needed here; and if we do not hurry, Spragne's dinner will have to walt for us. It la a quarter to eight

now. The reporter seemed about to follow his friend, but he stood for an instant irresolute. "I say, doctor," he inquired at last, "are you sure the main is drunk?"

"He has certainly been drinking heavily. Why?" "Heeanse it seems to me-Hello, we cannot go yet; the passenger is more badly hurt than the driver. "The passenger?" queried the physician, turning in surprise to the police-

"What passenger?" asked the policeman, looking at the cabman. "Have you a passenger inside, young feller?" "Naw," replied the cabman, who seemed to be partially sobered by the shock aml loss of blood, "Naw, I aln't got no ture, barrin' the man wot was on the box.

The reporter observed the man closely as he spoke; and then, pointing to Among the graduates from Yale this upon his chest and his himp body the step of the cab, which was plainly visible in the glare of a neighboring cleetrie lamn:

"I mean the passeager, whose blood is trickling there," he said, quietly, Every eye was turned in the direction of his outstretched hand. A few drops of a thick dark liquid had oozed from under the door, and was dripping upon the iron step. The cab door was closed and the curtain was drawn down over the sash, the glass of which had been shattered by the fall.

One of the policemen tried to open the door. It stuck in the jamb. Then he exerted upon it the whole of his brute strength; and, of a sudden, it yleided. As it flew open the body of a man lurched from the inside of the cab, and before anyone could catch it tumbied in a heap upon the pavement. A low cry of horror escaped from the crowd. The cabman's passenger was a man past middle age, neutiy but pinialy dressed.

As Dr Thurston and a pediceman Just before the collision, the young bent over the prostrate form, the reporter shot a keen glance in the direction of the cabmun, who stood staring at the body with a look of gliastly terror in his buiging eyes.

Presently the physician started to his feet with a low exchimation of sur-

"is he dead, doctor?" asked the policenmn.

"He has been dead for scare time," eplied the physician, impressively, 'the body is almost cold.' "Iteen dead for some time?" cchocd the policeman.

"Yes; this man was shot. See there!" As he spoke he pointed to a red strenk which, starting from the left side of ward and marked the course of the tiny stream in which the life blood had flowed to a little pool on the floor of the "Shot!" excluimed the policeman, who turned immediately to one or his brother officers. "Krepeyour eye on the as they had inflicted upon each other calquan, dim. We'll have to take him in. And look out for the other nun.

> Then, addressing the calmin, upon each of whose shoulders a policeman's hand was immediately placed, he asked, roughly:

"Who is this maa?"

The cabman was completely sober now. He stood, pale and trembling, between his two cat lors, as he replied solemply:

"Hefore God, I don't know, hoss. ever saw him before." The pollceman looked at the man in you don't have to confess to me. Ilnt I guess you'il have a chance to tell that story to a judge and jury."

Then he proceeded to examine the dead mun's pockets. They were empty. "Looks like roldery," he murmured. "What is it, Jim? Unven't you got the other mnn?"

Jim bad not found the other man; for the pale young fellow in the sentskin engehad disniquenced. The reporter was stooding over the body, while Dr. Thurston cut through the clothing and laid lare a small, round wound.

"Here is another fullet wound," said Storgis, turning over the body slightly, aml pointing out a second round hole in the back of the drad man. He seemed to take great laterest in this discovery. He whipped out a steel tupe and rapidly lost carefully took a number of mensurements, as if to locate the positions of the two wounds. Then he stepped but othe calc and, striking match after match, he spent several minutes apparently ia eager search for something which he earld not find,

"That is strange," he mutiered to himself, as he came out at last, "What Is It?" inquired Thurston.

He at once renewed his search on the brilliantly lighted payement in the immediate virinity of the cab; examining every stone, investigating every joint and every rut, prodding with his came every lump of freezen mud, turning every stray scrap of paper, "Well, doctor," he said, when at length he rejoined his companion, "if von have done all that you can we muy as well go. It is one of the prettiest problems I have met; but there is nothing more for neetalearn here for the present. By the way, as I was saying when I interrupted myself a little while ago, are you sure the culmum is drunk? I wish you would take another good look at him. The question may be more luportant than it seemed at

A few minutes later the physician and the reporter were hurrying along to make up for the time they had lost; the eab and the calanau had disappeared in the custody of the police, and the calonan's grewsome fare was jolting through Twenty-sixth street, In the direction of a small building which stands near the East river, and in which the straaded waifs of the new world metropolis can find rest at last, upon a stone slab, in the beginning of their eternal sleep.

Broadway had resumed its holiday spect; the wizened hag at the corner still patiently ground out her plaintive discords: the teatful new-boy, with his slowly diminishing armitel of newspapers, continued to shive in the cold wind, as he offered his stock to the hurrying pedestrians; the big policeman ugain piloted his four charges through the mass of mosting vehicles, and the clanging cubic cars started once more on their rumbling course.

> CHAPTER II. THE WAGER

"What I menn to assert," said Ralph Storgis, with quiet conviction, "is that every crime is its own historian; that all its minutest details are written in circumstantial evidence as completely as an eyewitness could see them-uve more fully and more truly than they could be described by the criminal himself."

The reporter was a man of alout 20, whose regular features love the unmistakable stamp of intelligence and retimement. In repose, they were an habitual expression of increspective concentration, which might have led a careless observer to class Bulidi Sturgis in the category of nimless drenneers. But a single flash of the piercing gray eyes generally sufficed to dispei may such impression; and told of keen perception and underlying power. The mouth was it in and kind, the bearing that of a gen-tieman and a man of education. "But," objected the host, "you surely do not menn to express a belief in the infulfibility of circumstantiai evidence?"

"Why not 2" "Heguine you must know as well as I longel to spoke in it! - Tit-Bits.

"All right, young feiler," he said, anyone how inisleading uncorroborated circumstantial evidence is, I do not for get what remarkable results you have often accomplished for the Daily Tempest in detecting and following up clews to which the official detectives were blind. But, frankly, were not your conclusions usually the result of bicky guesses, which would have remalned comparatively useless as evidenre had they not been subsequently proved correct by direct testimony?"

"Let me reide to your question by an other. Sprugue," answered Sturgis. "When you draw a cheek, does the pay ing teller at the bank require the tes timony of witnesses to your signature before admitting its genulneness?"

"No; of course not," "Precisely. He probably knows the signature of Harvey M. Sprague, the depositor, letter than he does the face of Sprague, the artist. And yet the evidence here is jurrely circumstuntial. I know of at least one reeent instance in which the officials of a New York bank placed their implielt relinare upon circumstantial evidence of this sort, in spite of the direct testimony of the depositor who was willing to acknowledge the genulneness of a cheek to which his name had been forged,"

"I suppose you refer to the Forsytl ease," said Sprague; "luit you must remember that Col. Forsyth was netracted by the desire to shield the forger, who was his own scapegrace ndertook in initudate a School-Teacher, But Got the Werst of It.

When I limites D. Folsom, the New York lawyer, left Phillips-Exeter neademy, New Hampshire, he had a distinct feeling of pride that he was graduated from the same school that sent Duniel Welster to fight the battle of life, and, because Webster's second step was school teaching, and because he needed the money, he adopted this profession. From this time, on, to use his own words, all likeness between lds own and the great statesman's eareer end ed, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

It was at Sunbornton Square, New Hampshire. There were four glants of boys in the school, all over is years of uge, and Mr. Folsom was only 19. that he had the advantage of practical physical training on his side, tine day the father of one of the giants, who had a lad reputation as a local fighter, drove up to the school house with an ax and asked for the teacher. He hammered on the door for several moments, and when the tencher appeared he returned to his buggy The trate parent said:

"Young man, did you lick one of my boys vesterday?"

"I did. sir." "Well, if you do It again I'll fix

"No, you won't," was the answer; 'I'll whip your boys ac long as they are under my charge and disober the rules."

"Well, we'll see," said the man, preparing to get out.

It just then occurred to Mr. Palsom that this was his time, and he lifted the bed of the light buggy off the wheels and theped it over. Into the ditch rolled the mun with the ax. while the teacher and 35 school children looked on and grinned. It was too much for the man, and, adjusting the buggy top, he rode quietly away.
